

About Me

I am from a small port town called Cape May in New Jersey. My dad was a fisherman and since childhood I was fascinated by fishing and we often went camping. By the way, an interesting fact about me due to the fact that as a child I had an abundance of fish and seafood for 11 years now, I have not eaten them at all. Also as a child I was a BoyScout, I love nature and out door activities.

I was always interested in cars and how they work, I wanted to be able to figure out why something didn't work. And that's why I went to mechanic school in Philadelphia and transferred there. There I met my wife, by the way she is from Belarus, a little country in Europe. Thanks to my acquaintance with her, I visited Belarus and other European countries a couple of times. There were hard times and I worked part-time in a restaurant where I was later promoted to a manager and at the same time I wondered where I could direct my passion in the desire to figure out how what works. Accidentally stumbled upon a book on an initial developer, I was drawn into it and I began to lack resources in free access to the poem, I decided to undergo training online while working as a manager.

Among other things, I have a dog, and a little more about myself, I consider my strengths to be hard work and passion for the process, and I also like to understand the details. On a minus this is perhaps the fact that I really love karaoke, but I'm a bad dancer and can't sing.
